

Manual.co Frontend Assignment

As part of the hiring process, we ask all our candidates to complete an assignment, in order for us to assess their coding skills and way of thought. Ideally, we'd like to see how comfortable you are with React JS, but if you prefer you can complete the assignment in whichever language is more convenient for you.

We estimate it will take you close to 1 full work day to complete it. To allow for flexibility in your time, you will have 1 full week from the day this assignment was given to you to complete it.

You will need to make decisions as part of the implementation. There is not, strictly, a correct or wrong choice to these decisions; all are good, as long as you can explain why. We look forward to meeting in person and having this discussion after you have completed your assignment.

The business case

At Manual we sometimes create landing pages to better explain our value proposition to users who land on these from ads. As an experiment, we've decided to create a landing page that will include a quiz, which will guide users through deciding if Manual is good for them.

User story

As a visitor, I want a landing page and quiz to help me decide if Manual is the correct product for me

Specifications

You'll find the design mockup on zeplin: <https://zpl.io/bzA5Z0z> and also at the end of this document.

If you don't already have an account on zeplin, please open one. Then provide us with your account email and we will invite you to the project.

The landing page should be coded as designed, and tested for all screen sizes. It should be responsive, or at least degrade gracefully on mobile screens. Note that no mobile mockups have been created, you'll have to improvise.

You will also be provided with a JSON file, containing the 3-step questionnaire which should be shown to the user when they click the "take the quiz" button in the top section.

This landing page should be a single-page application, meaning the quiz should open in the same page. This is to avoid the drop-off when users get bored waiting for the next page to load.

The quiz questions should have four steps: one for each question, and one for the result step.

Each step should be shown full screen (no part of the landing page should be displayed to distract the user), with white background and dark text. When the user answers one quiz question, they should be taken to the next one immediately. After the final quiz question they should be shown the results page.

The quiz questions are fully described in the provided JSON file. The quiz should be fully dynamic, allowing the existing JSON file to be replaced with a different one, or even with an API.

- If the user answers “true” in any of the true/false questions, they should be shown the result “Unfortunately, we are unable to prescribe this medication for you. This is because finasteride can alter the PSA levels, which maybe used to monitor for cancer. You should discuss this further with your GP or specialist if you would still like this medication.”
- If the user answers “false” in both of the true/false questions, they should be shown the result “Great news! We have the perfect treatment for your hair loss. Proceed to www.manual.co, and prepare to say hello to your new hair!”

There are plenty of reasons why you might be having difficulty in the erection department. We can help you figure out possible reasons why. And prescribe a pill if needed.
